The Family Legacy Checklist

What history's richest families got wrong, and simple steps to protect your own.

In 1937, TIME magazine called the Nizam of Hyderabad the richest man in the world. His family did not lose that fortune in a single day. It slipped out of their control over decades: a fortune nobody had ever counted, an heir nobody had trained to manage it, a household of thousands to support, and trusts and lawsuits that took years to untangle.

Most of us will never inherit a palace. But every family has something worth protecting: a home, savings, the people who depend on us, and the stories we hope to pass on. This checklist turns the hard lessons of famous families into a few calm, practical steps.

HOW TO USE THIS FILE

1. Work through one section at a time. There's no need to finish in a day.
2. Tick each box once it's done, or note what's missing.
3. Bring the completed list to an estate attorney or financial adviser. It will save you time and fees.
4. Revisit it once a year, and after any major life change.

"I inherited a scrapyard."

FILE No. 001 · MUKARRAM JAH, THE 8th NIZAM (AS QUOTED BY THE NEW YORK TIMES)

DOCUMENT I The Will

When there is no clear will, the law and sometimes the courts decide who gets what.

- [ ] I have a written, signed will that meets the legal requirements where I live. Witness rules vary by state and country.
- [ ] I've named an executor I trust, plus a backup in case they can't serve.
- [ ] I've named a guardian for any minor children or dependents.
- [ ] My executor knows where the original is kept and how to reach my attorney.
- [ ] I've reviewed it since my last big life event: a marriage, divorce, birth, death, move or major purchase.

DOCUMENT II Beneficiaries

Many accounts pass outside your will, so the beneficiary form is what counts.

- [ ] I've checked the beneficiaries on retirement accounts, life insurance and annuities.
- [ ] I've named backup (contingent) beneficiaries on each.
- [ ] I've asked my bank about payable-on-death or transfer-on-death options.
- [ ] No ex-spouse or late relative is still listed by mistake.

DOCUMENT III If I Can't Speak

Illness can take away your voice. Decide now who speaks for you.

- [ ] Durable power of attorney for my finances.
- [ ] Healthcare proxy and advance directive (a living will).
- [ ] Medical-records permission (in the US, a HIPAA authorization) so loved ones can get information.
- [ ] I chose people who will protect my interests, not simply who is closest to the money.

DOCUMENT IV Trusts: Ask About Them

The great fortunes used trusts for a reason. Many ordinary families can too.

- [ ] I've asked an attorney whether a revocable living trust makes sense for me, for example to avoid probate, add privacy or plan for illness.
- [ ] Special-needs planning is in place if a loved one relies on benefits.
- [ ] I've considered protections for an heir who may struggle with money.

DOCUMENT V Protect the Money

The Nizam's treasure was real. But jewels in a vault don't pay the bills.

- [ ] No single investment, venture or person controls most of what I have.
- [ ] I get a second opinion before any large financial decision.
- [ ] I check the credentials of anyone advising me on money. In the US, FINRA BrokerCheck is free.
- [ ] I know the warning signs of financial exploitation of older adults: sudden pressure, secrecy, new "friends" and unusual withdrawals.

FROM THE ARCHIVE

In 1948, about one million pounds was moved out of a Hyderabad government account in a London bank. Nobody could agree whose money it was, so the bank froze it. It took 71 years, and a High Court judge, to decide. A clear record of who owns what, and who decides, can spare a family that wait.

DOCUMENT VI The Family File

The most painful estates are the ones nobody can find.

- [ ] One master list of accounts, policies, property and debts.
- [ ] Digital accounts noted, with a secure way for loved ones to access them (such as a password manager's emergency access).
- [ ] Where the originals are: the will, deeds, titles and any safe deposit box.

DOCUMENT VII The Conversation

Silence is the thread that runs through almost every file we open.

- [ ] My family knows my plans and who to call.
- [ ] I've written a letter of wishes: values, memories, and who should have the heirlooms.
- [ ] I've recorded the family stories before they're lost.
